

URBAN WILDLIFE...WHAT IS IT?

Urban wildlife is wildlife that can adapt, survive and thrive among humans and man-made structures. Habitat loss due to housing and building developments can displace some animals, but others adapt quite well to their new environment finding food, water and shelter created by people. Coyotes, deer, raccoons, skunks, bats and opossums are some common urban wildlife species found in the United States.

